We remember the U of T men who lost their lives 100 years ago this month:

Capt. Charles Cranston Corbett studied at Veterinary college, which was then part of U of T. He enlisted in the Canadian Army Veterinary Corps and later was appointed to the Royal Army Veterinary Corps. After several months in France he died on February 3, 1918.

Capt. William Gordon MacNevin served with the Army Dental Corps. He served at various points on the front, then in December 1916 returned to England and served at a hospital. He was invalided to Canada in May 1917 and died from tuberculosis on Feb. 3, 1918.

Lt. Donald Gordon MacLean joined the Royal Naval Air Service then transferred to the Royal Flying Corps. On February 4, 1918, soon after his arrival on the Italian front, he was flying in a formation which attacked enemy planes. In the ensuing action he was killed by an anti-aircraft shell, his machine crashing as it crossed the lines.

See over for more biographies....
Lt. Douglas Quirk Ellis served with the Canadian Army Service Corps, then the Canadian Railway Troops, then the Royal Flying Corps. While training in England on February 8, 1918, he was killed in a collision.

Lt. Wilfred Bissell Andrew served as a Signalling Officer with several battalions then joined the Royal Flying Corps and received his wings at the end of 1917. He went to France in January 1918, being attached as a bomber to a squadron on the Nancy front. On February 12, 1918 he was killed in action, his machine crashing after being over the enemy’s lines.

Captain Howard Kilbourne Harris was serving as a lawyer at war’s outbreak. In April 1915 he went to England and joined an Imperial unit, the 11th Essex Regiment. We went to France in April 1916, and served on the Somme and Ypres-Passchendaele fronts. He was promoted to Captain and awarded the Military Cross in May 1917 for successfully directing with great coolness and skill an attack on the enemy’s trench near Albert. He was killed on February 22, 1918 while making a reconnaissance on an advanced German post near Bapaume. A carillon bell in the Soldiers’ Tower is dedicated in his memory. He was the brother of Lawren Harris, renowned artist.

Lt. Charles Russell Hillis reached France in August 1917, and served first on the Lens front and then through the battle of Passchendaele. After the return of his unit to Lens he was wounded, as it was taking over the line from another battalion. He died in hospital on February 25, 1918.

Capt. Ralph Himsworth Jarvis served with the Royal Flying Corps. He began training at Curtiss airfield in Ontario, went to England at end of 1915, reached the Somme front in May 1916, and in August was appointed Flight Commander. He was awarded the Military Cross for his service in driving off three enemy planes, after which he returned to complete his work of observation, and for later carrying out a reconnaissance in a strong gale. He was subsequently awarded the Belgian Croix de Guerre. He was posted as Acting Major in England and was accidentally killed on February 27, 1918 while flying with a pupil.
