We remember the U of T men who lost their lives 100 years ago this month:

Lieutenant Walter Oswell Boswell served with the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve in the Mediterranean. His ship swept for mines off the coasts of North Africa and Palestine, and he was involved in the final operations against the Turks. In February 1919 he sailed for England but he contracted influenza and died on March 3, 1919.

Lieutenant Norman Creighton Bilton served with the Canadian Heavy Artillery. He reached France in June 1918, served through the battle of Amiens and all the following engagements to the signing of the Armistice. After returning to England he became ill with pneumonia and died on March 5, 1919.

Seaman Charles Randolph Gillan served with the Royal Canadian Volunteer Reserve and after serving at Esquimalt Naval Station and Halifax, he died of pneumonia on March 16, 1919.

Lieutenant Robert Blackburn Sinclair served with the Royal Field Artillery on the Ypres, Somme and Arras fronts and was injured by shell-shock. He was subsequently seconded to the Royal Flying Corps and served in England where he died of pneumonia on March 22, 1919.

Lieutenant John Alexander Proctor served as Scout Officer for his infantry Battalion through the major battles of 1917 and 1918. He was wounded in September 1918 in the advance from Arras. On March 31, 1918 while waiting in England to return home, he was accidentally killed.
